Synergy and effects

Voice the needs of TG - Influence on planning

The practise of participatory engagement in the process of designing activities allows us to alter the measures accordingly; shelter, info on vaccines, language training, mental health etc

The partnership with the city and the two FEAD-projects amplifies those needs and enables better informed decisions on social work including the target group

Continuous info sharing

Through regular network meetings with civil society and the city, information is continuously shared allowing for preemptive measures to be put in place

Information that seems less urgent can be crucial to other organizations and initiatives

Connecting nodes in network – creating unforeseen effects

Being tentative to the needs of the target group and allowing for a flexible approach to implementation of activities opens up for new approaches

Preschool for mobile kids -> adult literacy

Emergency shelters in caravans for families -> labour market integration

Using FEAD projects to strengthen other measures

The Po Drom project employs fieldworkers with language and cultural skills who in cooperation with the fieldworkers from the municipality strengthen efforts from their part to reach people they meet

Utilizing network for emergency response

Covid response – Quarantine measures and information to the target group

Extreme cold – emergency shelter during winter nights

Joint efforts with hard to reach groups

The two projects together reach different groups through the different aims: health/social

People attending health info can be linked to social efforts and the other way around

Knowledge and relations to the target group has informed measures to reach groups with info on the Covid19 pandemic

Lessons learned

- Allow for flexibility in planning of activities, change with new information from the target group and from partners
- Partnership between the civil society and local authorities strengthens the overall efforts towards the target group
- A network model creates contacts in many directions
- Keep the network open outside of urgent problems to be able to act quickly when its necessary
